

It might just be me... but do people seem to be in a happier place at the moment. It may be the sunshine, it may be because summer holidays are just around the corner? However at JMA, the better mood is because the people we talk to on a daily basis... we truly believe that the telecoms employment market is slowly picking up.

More of our long standing clients are ringing in new vacancies every week, and interestingly many of them are because of an employee resigning. Recruitment freezes seem to be becoming a thing of the past, but more importantly people who in stable jobs are leaving current positions and looking for a change.

As little as 2 months ago, people were keeping their heads down working hard waiting for things to pick up. As long standing recruiters, we have seen this before... the market has started to move and will gain momentum and before you know it we will be very busy.

In recognition of this we have begun a comprehensive update of our database. This will be a long process, but during the holiday season we think its a worthwhile project in order to make sure we are fully prepared for when the market hits full speed. All eyes are on September and current clients are asking us to gear up now. <http://jmanetwork.com/downloads/GetYourCareerMoving.pdf>

Things are on the up, and happier days are very nearly here again!

Regards Patrick.
